Summary of the Positive Aging LifeStyles Program

Positive Aging LifeStyles (PALS) is a new program of the Center for Positive Aging. It is designed for use in retirement communities, congregations, and other groups of senior adults. Throughout history, elders were honored as leaders, judges, and keepers of traditions. Today's elders have ascended the career ladder, reached the zenith of success in midlife, and now—rather than being revered for their wisdom—face inevitable decline.

But a new model of late-life development is evolving. Extended longevity calls for extended consciousness to offset the physical and social diminishments of old age. Aging is an anticipated fulfillment of life, a badge of success. As an elder, one is called to use the gifts that can only be acquired through a lifetime of experience to nurture others and mentor a younger generation.

One does not become an elder just by becoming elderly. Elderhood is a process. The PALS program takes the first step towards turning aging into the most meaningful time of life, allowing an elder to live the next chapter of his/her life with passion and service to their community.

This program is made up of three modules: Ageless Mind, Ageless Body, and Ageless Spirit. Objectives for the program include:

- Maximizing quality of life as an elder works toward an ageless body, mind and spirit.
- Enabling elders to serve others in a way that will help them live with maximum well-being.
- Building a society where aging and longevity are used to improve life for people of all ages.

Facilitators will be able to:

- Recruit senior adults from their organization to participate in the PALS program.
- Lead a PALS group through sessions on Ageless Mind, Body and Spirit.
- Receive tips on facilitating a group of senior adults.

Who Should Attend:
